Eating disorders

Right now, at least 1.25 million people in the UK are living with an eating disorder, and millions more who support them feel the impact too. Eating disorders can be deeply isolating, but connecting with others who understand, or who share your interests and values, can be life-changing. And it doesn't matter whether your community is one person or many, even a single meaningful connection can bring hope, strength, and the reminder that you are not alone.

Raynaud's Awareness Month, observed throughout the month of February, aims to raise awareness about Raynaud's phenomenon, a condition that affects blood circulation in extremities such as fingers and toes. It's an opportunity to educate the public about the condition's symptoms, causes, and management, as well as to offer support to those living with Raynaud's.

Raising awareness about Raynaud's phenomenon has become increasingly important as more people are diagnosed with the condition. While the specific origins of Raynaud's Awareness Month are not widely documented, its mission is clear: to improve the lives of individuals affected by Raynaud's through education, support, and research.
